How would you rate the community's communication and engagement with the public?

 Is it possible that there's a typo in this question?
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded A Poor
 The City's communication you mean?? It's getting better, for example this survey. The City needs to give it's citizens multiple ways to submit feedback. The City then needs to report that feedback BACK to the community to show us what the majority said, and why decisions were made how they were.
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded D Excellent
 Excellent since the new mayor started
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded A Poor
 Previous City Administration loathed public engagement. Our new mayor, council and administration seem engaged but decisions effecting neighborhoods have continued to move forward without engagement. East Park renaming.and Third St. parking pilot are recent notable examples.
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded C Good
 The communication in this question makes me think it is a survey between the community and public, which does not match the city government context.
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded C Good
 This question is unclear. It states "... the community's communication and engagement with the public." Are you referring to city departments communication and engagement with the public?
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded B Fair
 A very poorly written question. Shouldn't you be asking to evaluate the "City's" communication with the public rather than the community's communication with itself?
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded C Good
 I own the paddle boat rentals inside Silver Lake Park. The way that I find out about these events is either through the post-bulletin or neighbors. It would be nice if I would get something in the mail an email. these projects that are happening around silverlake the same if not more than many of the neighbors.
-  Anonymous user's Opinion Responded C Good
 That is a pretty broad question, I found it difficult to answer.

 I love the increased emphasis on community engagement across different platforms! That being said, we can still improve in a number of ways. Community input and engagement sessions should go to where people are, be accessible, be child friendly, be after working hours, and be inclusive of people who speak different languages. Otherwise, we are disengaged with a broad swath of the community. Also, a lot of community engagement devalues both the knowledge of experts and the experience of community members. Questions to the community should center on their values and lived experience, and not ask them to judge the expertise of professionals or merely provide social license for a decision. This Strong Towns article has some good critique of regular community engagement, as well as some suggestions for better ways to engage the community: <<https://www.strongtowns.org/journal/most-public-engagement-is-worse-than-worthless>>. Thanks for taking the time to do these polls and the solicit feedback!

 I'm really pleased with all the positive changes this Mayor is bring to the city.
